Dear Mr. Wood:—

According to a recent letter sent out relative to a Dinner on the 23 ult. I am under the impression that the Museum is to be closed. Is this so? I hope not.

Thanking you for your reply, I am

Dear Mr. Strauss:

The letter recently sent out concerning the spring dinner has apparently misled a few people. The Museum will be closed for about a year on account of the new addition we are building, as well as various changes that will be made in the present building. However, the Library, coin room, and offices will remain open, and we shall function the same as before; the only change being that the exhibition room on the ground floor is closed.

Very truly yours,

Curator

Dear Sir:

The Museum was not interested in any of your four coins but Mr. Newell said he would buy one. I think he offered a dollar for it. The coins were turned over to Mr. Rush some weeks ago and I have forgotten the details. He is now on his vacation for two weeks. You might call him up after the first of October, as he has the story about these coins.

Very truly yours,

Dear Mr. Strauss:

I absolutely do not know where you could sell the Roman coins you left here the other day. Nobody comes around here now days to buy coins and at the present time I know of nobody that is collecting the late Roman silver such as you have. A dealer naturally would not give you much for them as as far as I know none are rare and since the Plevna find was marketed which consisted of a great many thousand pieces of just the period most of yours are the market has been pretty well flooded. I will show these to Mr. Newell in case he should come in soon. In the meantime they are in Mr. Rush's possession and you can get them any time you wish.

Very truly yours,
